The XXII session of the Scientific SMKN "Food - Today and Tomorrow"

18-19 May 2017, Szczecin

Scientific program:

XXII Session of the Young Scientific Staff is a continuation of the annual meetings, which aim in enabling the presentation of the scientific achievements of graduate students and young researchers. The conference enables the exchange of experiences, views among both the young and experienced faculty. The presence and involvement during the session for young scientists is an inspiration and an incentive to continue to improve their scientific workshop. The leading theme of the Session - "Food - Today and Tomorrow" covers the entire area of research related to the subject of food - both in terms of scientific research and the industrial sector. We hope that this year's session will also contribute to the further integration of the environment associated with the science of food and nutrition in wider sense.

Session topics:

- food processing and preservation,
- improvement of technological processes,
- food safety, the use of food additives
- analysis of food,
- food chemistry and biotechnology
- novel foods,
- current trends in human nutrition,
- health-promoting substances and bioactive food,
- and similar issues.

During the session the plenary lectures, oral communications, poster session and panel discussion is provided
